Analogia is a massive new art installation by Ben Tritt, making its worldwide debut at Bryant Park. The largest free-standing structure of its kind, Analogia is an overlapping of painting, architecture, and sculpture. Two 60-foot towers and a pyramid create a temporary gateway to Bryant Park. The imagery, inspired by sculptures from the Metropolitan Museum of Art, captures the inherent tension and similarity of world cultures in a Babel-like structure that juxtaposes Western and non-Western traditions.

Made up of 1.5 miles of bamboo, 200 gallons of tar and enamel, 600 yards of burlap, and 16 tons of steel
